RATE SHEET PAIN

5 Rate Sheet Habits Killing Your Margin (Part 2)

None of them look urgent. That's exactly the problem.

HABIT 1

Reactive updates instead of scheduled ones

A sheet that only changes when something goes wrong is always slightly behind the market it's supposed to reflect.

1

HABIT 2

Discretionary ranges that only move one direction

Negotiations pull margin down more often than up. Without a ceiling on how often that's allowed, the range becomes a one-way door.

2

HABIT 3

Exceptions approved but never logged

Each one looks reasonable alone. Nobody sees the pattern because nobody's tracking the list across the quarter.

3

HABIT 4

Pricing that isn't segmented by deal type

A single blended rate looks simpler on paper and hides which deal types are actually profitable and which are quietly subsidized.

4

HABIT 5

No feedback loop between realized margin and guidelines

The sheet gets built once and referenced forever, instead of adjusting based on what actually closed last quarter.
